HEAVY LOSS BY FIRE

Potomac Electric Light and Power Company the Sufferer,

EXTENT OF DAMAGE PLACED AT $50,000

Street Cars Tied Up During Progress of the Blaze.

CAUSED BY SHORT CIRCUIT

An alarm was turned in vesterday afternoon from box 732 for a fire in the building of the Potomac Electric Light and Power Company, at the northwest corner of 33d and K streets. The fire was discovered by George Harper, a barber, whose place of business is at 3306 M street, between whose place and the power house the canal flows. Before the flames were extinguished considerable damage was done, but not so much to the buildings as to the machinery. The loss, according to the statement of Super-intendent Sinclair to a Star reporter this morning, is $50,000.

The fire originated in the northern part of the large building. The floor of the structure at this point is on a level with the towpath of the canal. The front portion s on a level with K street, twenty-five or thirty feet lower than the machinery portion, and contained seven large boilers. The thoroughfare known as 23d street is so steep at this point that it is practically impossible to use it for vehicles. The plant of the power company occupies the entire west side of the square from the canal to K street, while on the east side several small dwellings are located.

The fire is supposed to have been caused by a short circuit—that is, two bare wires coming together—the heat from which spread to the adjoining woodwork. The immense generator known as No. 2, and located about the center of the extreme east end of the machinery room, was where the fire started.

The big machine was so badly wrecked that it is practically destroyed, the heavy iron frame alone being uninjured, so far as can be seen, by the flames. The frame is covered with dirt and rust, however, the result of the fire and water.

Firemen Handicapped. thirty feet lower than the machinery por

Firemen Handicapped. The alarm was answered by engine com-panies No. 5 of Georgetown and Nos. 1 and 9 of Washington, with truck B. On account of the steepness of the grade and the narrowness of the bridge across the canal narrowness of the bridge across the canal at this point the engines could not go down 33d street. The fall of snow also acted as a handtcap to the firemen, but, despite this, the hose was quickly turned on. The interior of the machinery room was ablaze, especially the east end, and the large and heavy brick wall on that side was red hot from the effects of the heat. With the arrival of the other engines streams of water were thrown into the fiery furnace from three different points.

At the outbreak of the fire the large boilers, seven in number, of stupendous proportions, were all in full working order. The pipe leading into the machinery room was full of steam, and there was danger from this cause. The firemen at the boilers raked off the fire as rapidly as they could, and let off the steam, thus avoiding a great danger from another source. Had one of the boilers exploded as a result of the fire the entire building would have been demolished, and perhaps a large area of buildings adjoining.

The firemen were also handicapped in djoining.

The firemen were also handicapped in adjoining.

The firemen were also handicapped in their efforts to extinguish the fire by the lights going out after the greater portion of the flames had been smothered by the water. With the turning off of the steam the dynamos of the plant stopped working, and consequently the current was cut off, extinguishing the various arc lights which were located in the room. In the darkness there was considerable danger in fighting the fire. Beneath the floor of the machinery room were laid innumerable cables, which led from the generators in the central and northern parts of the building to the switchboards, located almost against the south wall. There was some fear that the cables might be fully charged with electricity with sufficient power to cause fatal results in case there was contact.

Probable Origin.

Probable Origin.

fire for a time seemed to burn with severe intensity around the floor of the engine room, and this leads many to the belief that the short circuit may have been caused by cables beneath the floor. The wood was well soaked with oil, which necessarily covers a place where there is any quantity of machinery, and this formed excellent fuel for the flames. The roof is excellent fuel for the flames. The roof is perhaps thirty-five or forty feet from the floor in the center, but the flames leaped through the intervening distance and start-ed to consume the upper part of the room. The glass in the skylight was melted and cracked by the best leaf the floor. down on the floor and were imbedded in the machinery.

By the hard work of the firemen, who, By the hard work of the firemen, who, despite the difficulties, fought the fiames well, the fire was mainly confined to the eastern end of the room. The portion in the vicinity of the switchboards also suffered slightly. While the flooring was not burned through in all places, there were spots in which the flames had eaten away everything, and on looking into the cavities it could be seen that the wooden beams, used with the irons ones as supports, were charred and burned. The roof on the interior side, at the east end, was also charred by the flames. The fact that there was a heavy sheet-iron roof probably prevented a heavy sheet-iron roof probably prevented the flames from proceeding further in their work of destruction.

While the damage to the building itself was small, not exceeding $1,000, if that much, the machinery suffered greatly. The generator, where the fire is supposed to have originated, is practically destroyed, as is stated in the foregoing, and will almost have to be replaced entirely. While the other machines escaped destruction, the immense quantity of water thrown over them, coupled with the dirt and pieces of glass which fell upon them, will necessitate their complete overhauling. So far as known, only one machine escaped injury in this respect, and that was the injury in this respect, and that was the one located in the extreme northeast corner of the room. The switchboards were also injured, and the superintendent stated this morning that all of the delicate machinery was ruined, which means the practical destruction of the switch connections.

The Large Generators. The machinery room contained two immense generators of modern make and said to be the largest of their kind in the country. The machines are known as direct machines, the power of which may be rect machines, the power of which may be increased to 550 volts each and an amperage of 910. This is about equal to 750 horse power for each machine. Each has an immense fly wheel, twelve or fifteen feet in diameter, capable of a speed of ninety revolutions per minute.

The armature of machine No. 2 appears to be totally wrecked, while the field coils, connecting with the frame and armature, are equally as bad off. The heat was so intense that portions of the copper on the machine melted. This machine and the one similar to it, instead of being wrapped with wire, as in the old-style generators, have layers of copper strips, which are considered a great improvement over the wire system. Machine No. 1, while standing intact and apparently unharmed, is said to be so injured that it will have to be taken to pieces, cleaned and remounted and any defective parts replaced with new ones.

Alternating Machines.

and 902, occupied by Richard E. Murdock and Henry Ferris, respectively. Workmen had been employed in the vacant house during the day, and it is supposed that they left a fire in the stove that became hot enough to communicate to the house. The snow on the ground derayed the fire department and the flames haz gained some headway before water could be turned on. The damage to the three houses is estimated at about $1,000.

An alarm was turned in about 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon for fire in a store at No. 17 4th street northeast. A defective flue was responsible for the blaze. But little damage was done.

A shed in the rear of 1224 Pennsylvania avenue southeast was destroyed by fire Alternating Machines. In the room were two alternating machines, which are used for furnishing illumination for the streets, and which can be so changed as to afford additional power for the railroads if desired. One of these for the railroads if desired. One of these machines is reported to be considerably the worse for the deluge of water and dirt, while the other escaped with but little damage. The uninjured machine will be used until the others are ready for operation. Workmen were employed this morning in laying temporary cables to connect with this machine, which will be cleaned as thoroughly as possible, and which is expected to be ready for use some time this afternoon. In the engine room were also located four American Wheelook cross-connection engines, one for each generator. Three of these engines escaped without great damage, other than by the injury caused from the water.

The power house furnished the illumination for a portion of Georgetown, and also A shed in the rear of 1224 Pennsylvania avenue southeast was destroyed by fire about 6 o'clock this morning. The bright blaze attracted the attention of a number of pedestrians, and two alarms were turned in. About $150 damage resulted.

Hot ashes thrown in the area way at the house of G. D. Cox, No. 1200 L street northwest, caused a slight fire about 7 o'clock last night. The fire department was summoned by the sounding of an alarm from box 148, but there was not much for the firemen to do when they arrived at the house. Not more than $30 damage was done to the house and contents.

With the turning off of the steam the power to these roads ceased, and there was a tie-up until 7:10 o'clock, when a temporary connection was made with the power house of the Mstropolitan road, and sufficient current furnished to operate a few cars on each line. All of the roads were in running operation last evening, and this morning additional power was a forded, so that the cars were still enabled to run, though the full number generally employed on each suburban road could not be operated.

According to the statement of Superintendent Sinclair, the exact damage to the plant cannot be ascertained until there is a general overhauling. The large generator mentioned, which was practically destroyed, is stated to be worth nearly $15,000. The value of the entire plant at 33d and K streets, which is said to be the most modern and best equipped of any in the country, is placed at $200,000. The building and machinery are fully covered by insurance, and the main loss to the company will be in the delay caused in replacing the damaged machinery and the inconvenience thereby inflicted upon the general public.

The building occupied by the company was erected about 1830 by Edward L. Dent, a grandson of Edward Magruder Linthicum, a well-known philanthropist. It was the home of the E. L. Dent iron works until the place was closed. The building was idle for a time, but was secured by the present owners, who had just purchased what was known as the Potomac Electric Light Company. This was the opening wedge of the appearance of the syndicate in Washington, and after the purchase of the electric light company the Georgetown and Tenleytown railroad was bought. Other roads soon were from time to time absorbed by the consolidated company, until the present consolidated company the Georgetown and Tenleytown railroad was bought.
